Kadarik

KADARIK is a self-taught plastic artist born in 1972 in eastern France.

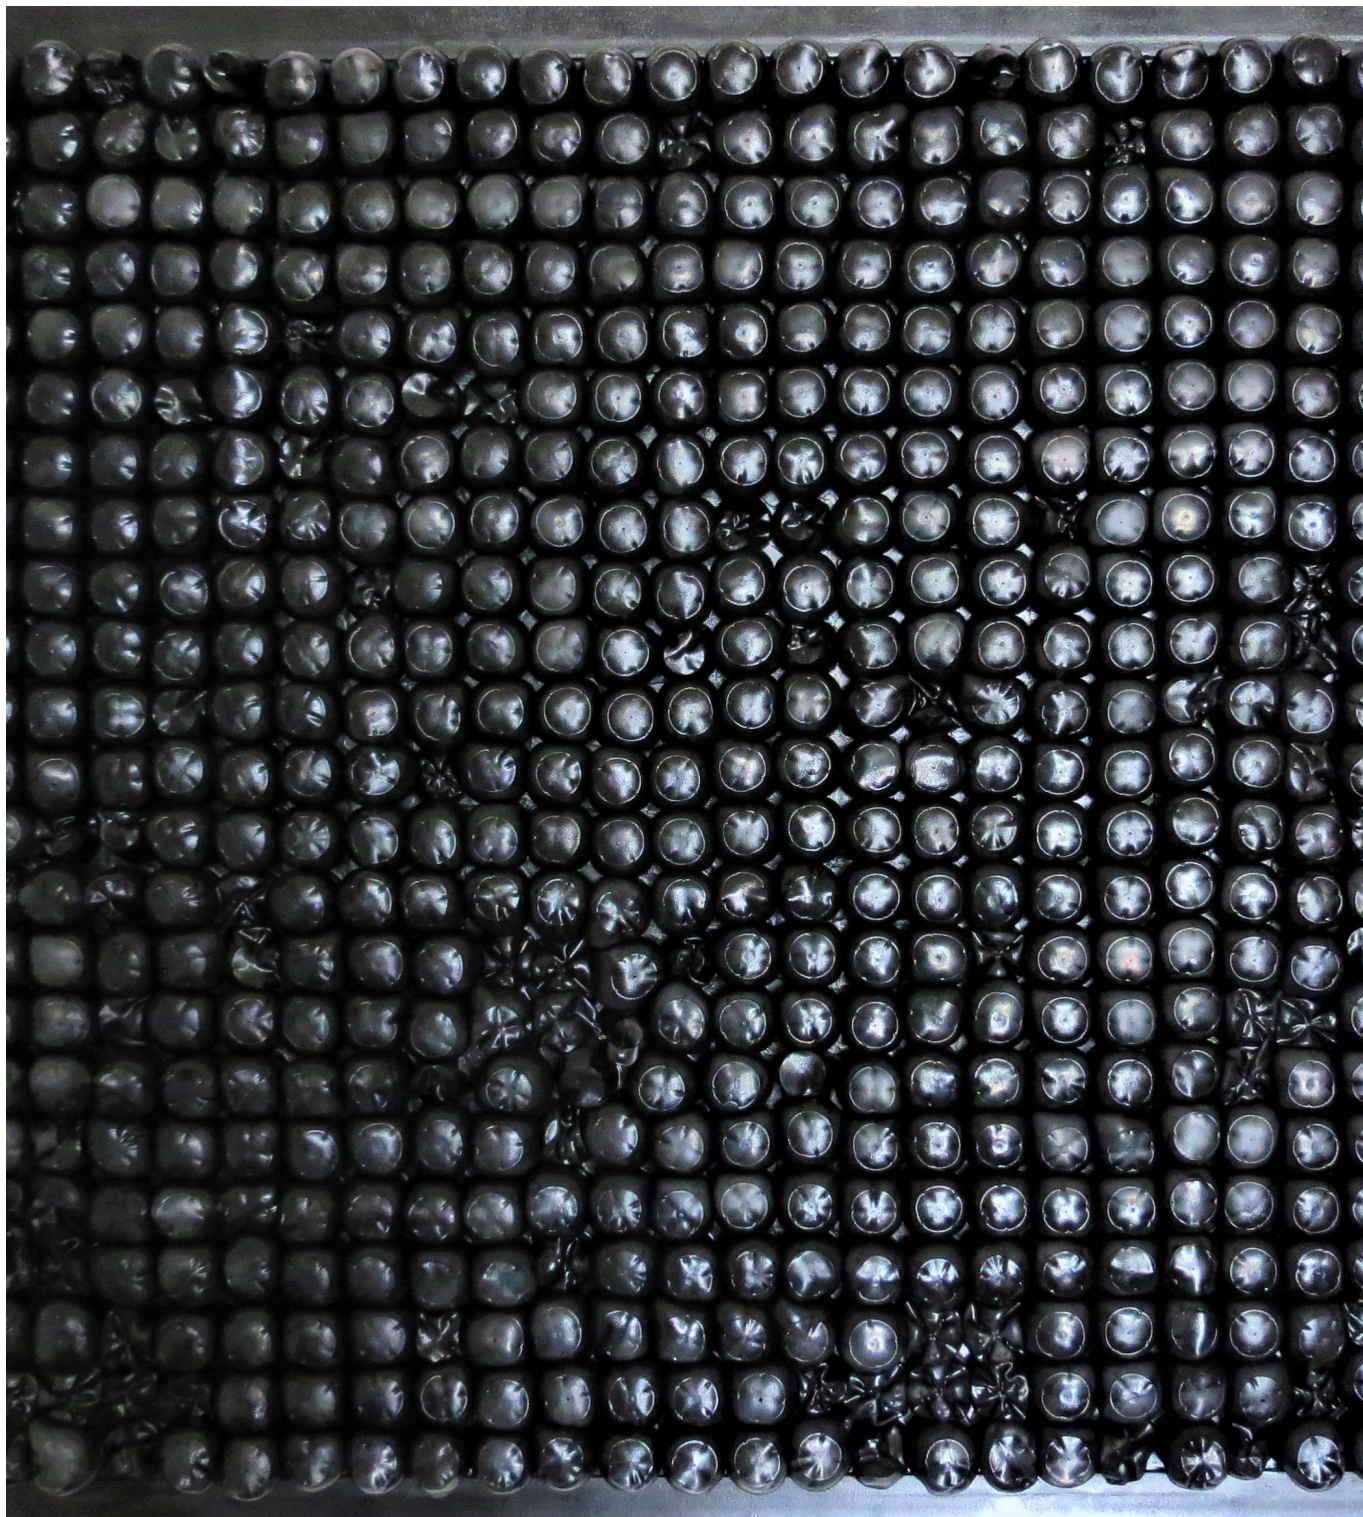

For 10 years, he spent time in the army where his various missions took him to the four corners of the world - engaging with different cultures, religions, customs and people.

In 2001, when he returned to being a civilian, he decided to use paintings as a primary way of expressing his travels, emotions, past experiences and vision of the current world. Guided by his life experiences, he mainly draws his first inspirations from the surrealist movement and from the underground New York artistic scene.

In 2006, he moved to Abidjan, Cote D'Ivoire, where he created a few figurative works, including a mural. His gaze slowly turned towards the world around him, stimulating a deep interest in Pop Art, Street Art, Graffiti, and collage which gave birth to some of his most popular work.

For the last 10 years, Kadarik has undertaken a 180° turn, expressing himself through abstraction. Offering a visual commentary on the social context that he apprehends through human and natural interactions. He continues his constant search for balance, shapes and colours to convey his vision of this changing and frenetic world - perpetual evolution: a world of all possibilities.

Using a blowtorch to mold plastic as seen in the "Hybrid" series or balloons as paint brushes, like in the "Impact" series, Kadarik adopts daring techniques and contemporary aesthetics to evoke strong emotions from his audience.
